WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

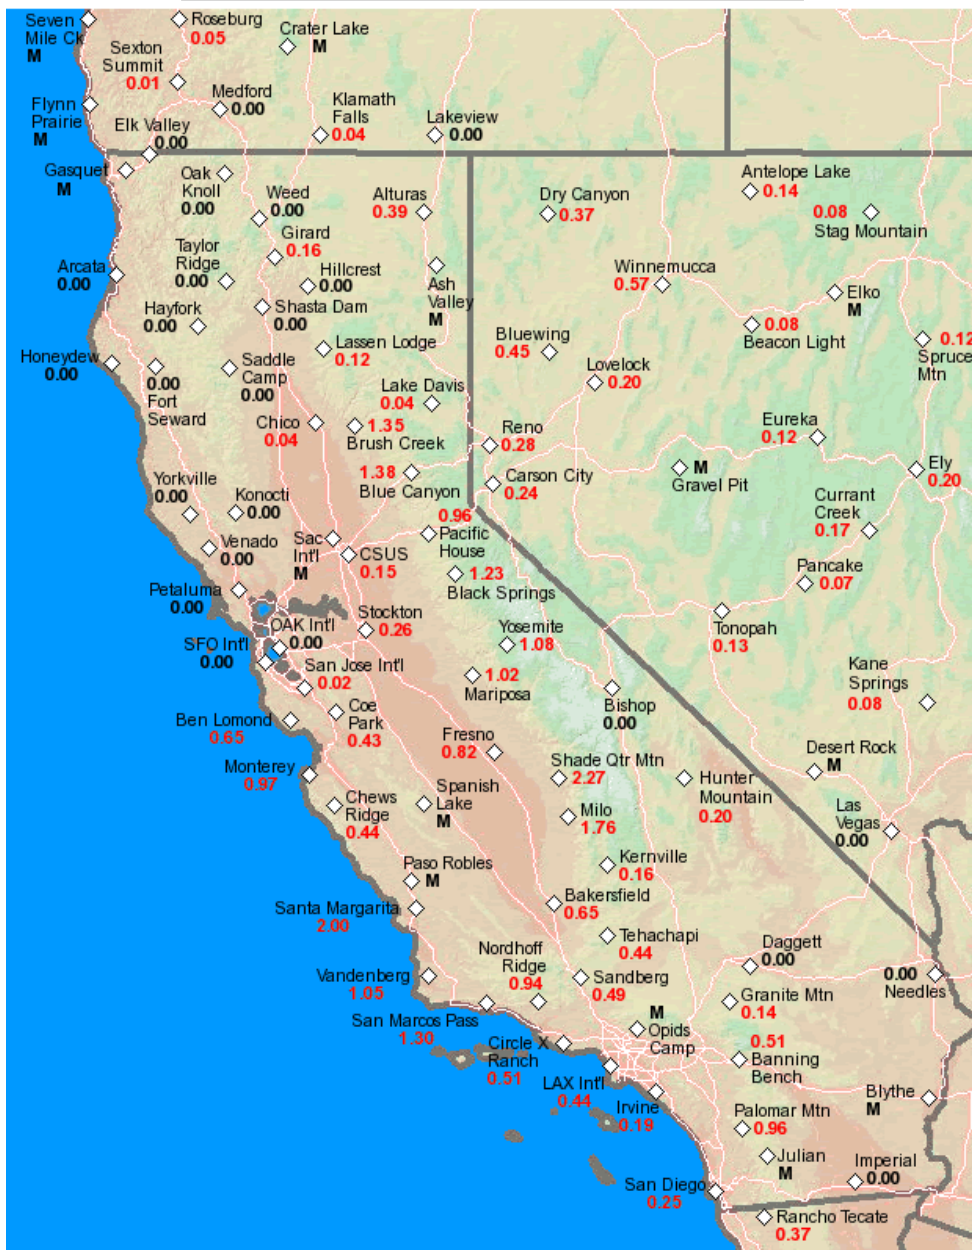

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A Pacific low pressure system will move through Northern California today bringing showers and possible isolated low elevation thunderstorms. Snow levels will drop to around 5000 feet. Showers end on Sunday as high pressure and northerly flow develop across the state. Temperatures warm Sunday through mid-week reaching a little above normal by Wednesday. Some occasional cloud cover is likely as a system passes to the north but after tonight, no precipitation is expected through mid-week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

The remains of a Pacific storm will bring scattered showers to the region through tonight, with most locations expected to receive less than a quarter inch of additional rainfall. However, up to a half inch of additional rainfall will occur over the Sierra and Sierra Foothills. The snow level will be around 6,000 feet over the Sierra and around 7,000 feet over the mountains of Southern California. Westerly winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes through this evening. It will be dry on Sunday as the storm moves off to the east. Temperatures will be around 10 degrees below normal through Sunday, with mid 40s to mid 50s in the mountains and 60s in the valleys. A big warming trend along with humidity in the teens will affect the region Monday through the middle of next week as a strong ridge of high pressure builds into California from the Pacific. Offshore winds will occur next week and peak at 15 to 25 mph with gusts 40 mph Tuesday night through Wednesday afternoon over the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California. The ridge will weaken bringing slow cooling and light winds to the region late next week.
